A Night Battle, over a Week Since By Walt Whitman Published 1862 May 12 — THERE was part of the late battle at Chancellorsville (second Fredericksburgh,) a little over a week ago, Saturday night and Sunday, under Gen. Joe Hooker, I would like to give just a glimpse of—(a moment's look in a terrible storm of war—of which a few suggestions are enough, and full details impossible.) The fighting had been very hot during the day, and after an intermission the latter part was renewed at night, and kept up with intense energy till 3 o'clock in the morning. That afternoon (Saturday) an attack was made and strongly Stonewell Jackson had gained a great advantage to the southern army, and broken our lines, entering on like a wedge, and forcing things in that position at dark. But Hooker at 11 o'clock made a desperate push, drove the south forces back, restored his original lines, and resumed his plan. This night scene was very exciting, and afforded countless strange and fearful pictures. The fighting had been general both at Chancellorsville and northwest of Fredericksburgh. (The hour of some great fighting, episodes, including on our part I think out of it, I think of the fierce heavy, the general rule.) The corps, the 6th, Sedgewick's, Light four divisions and Heavy battalions in thirty-six hours, retreating in great disorder, losing largely but maintaining itself fighting with the utmost desperation under all circumstances, getting over the Rappahannock only by the skin of its teeth, not getting over it last night, many brave men perished with vengeance, single renegades. But it was the day of Saturday evening, and through the night and Sunday morning, I wanted to make a special note of. It was largely in the woods, and quite a general engagement. The night was very pleasant, at times the moon shined out full and clear, all Nature so calm in itself, the early summer grass so rich, and foliage of the trees—yet there the battle raged, and many good fellows lying helpless, with new accretions to them, and every minute amid the rattle of muskets and crash of cannon, (for there was an artillery contest too,) the red life blood seeping out from heads or backs upon that green.	Notes
