People have spent time in the Yellowstone region for more than 11,000 years. Rock structures like this are evidence of the early presence of people in the area.

History of the Park

The human history of the Yellowstone region goes back more than 11,000 years. The stories of people in Yellowstone are preserved in objects that convey information about past human activities in the region, and the people's connections to the land that provide a sense of their identity.

Today, park managers use archaeological and historical studies help explain how humans left their mark in their game. Ethnography helps us learn about how groups of people identify themselves and their connections to the park. Research is also conducted to learn how people continue to affect and be affected by places that have been relatively protected from human impacts. Some alterations, such as the construction of roads and other facilities, are generally accepted as necessary to accommodate visitors. Information on the possible consequences of human activities both inside and outside the parks is used to determine when restrictions are needed to preserve each park's natural and cultural resources as well as the quality of the visitors' experience.

Core Lesson Reread a section of the text, underlining the main ideas and annotating the text. The years have shown that the legacy of those who worked to establish Yellowstone National Park in 1872 was far greater than simply reserving a unique landscape. This one act has led to a lasting concept—the national park idea. This idea conveys wilderness to be the inheritance of all people, who gain more from an experience in nature than from the exploitation of the land. The national park idea was part of the government's responsibility for the public domain. By the end of the 1800s, many thought that wilderness should be fair game for the first person who could claim it. The fruits were the rightful possession of all the people, including those yet to be born. As national parks, still greater expanses of land were placed into the public domain so the United States' natural wealth—in the form of lumber, grazing land, and minerals—would not be consumed at once by the greed of a few, but would pass on to future generations. The preservation idea spread across the world. Nations have preserved areas of natural beauty and historical worth so that all people have the opportunity to reflect on their natural and cultural heritage and to return to nature as a source of inspiration. Of all the benefits resulting from the establishment of Yellowstone National Park, this is the greatest. 	<h2>Notes</h2>
